Women Jobs and Education: Good or Bad?

In the book The Dressmaker of Khair Khan, a teenager named Kamila starts a dressmaking business for women who don't have jobs. Now there are many different businesses that are made so women have jobs. It is true that men are stronger than women. They might also be a little smarter than some women too. In the past, a group called the Taliban thought that all jobs are supposed to be for men only. Today people are starting businesses ran by women. People are also educating refugees from different countries. The good that will be gained from women being more educated and having jobs is that there will more businesses in the world, and there will be less violence in the world.

In my research I learned about 3 local organizations that help women. The first one is The AIL or the Afghan Institute of Learning. This organization rebuilds education and health care in Afghanistan. It's an Afghan Organization ran by women that want to help Afghans rebuild their lives. The education in this program teaches women how to sew like Kamila and the women from the book. The second organization is the Afghan Women Network. This organization helps afghan women get into the cabinet of the National Unity Government. The last local organization is the WLUML (Women Living under Muslim Laws). The people in this organization help women who are under Muslim laws to become free.

Also during my research, I studied 3 international organizations. The first one is the Bpeace organization. This group helps women find jobs a tries to stop the violence. Their motto is "More jobs means less violence". The next organization is the IEEW. This organization provides jobs for women who want to start businesses for themselves. They also supply people with student mentors. The last organization I researched was the Women for Women organization. Women in this group help Syrian women or other refugees. They educate women to become sponsors.

The local organizations and the international organizations are very similar in what they do. Both organizations help women have a better life. They both also give women equal rights to men which mean they believe that women can be helpful too. Some of those organizations are run by men who also believe that women should have equal rights. By U.S citizens helping refugee women get jobs and start their future as U.S citizens, we are making the world an equal place and stopping drama at the same time.

In conclusion, businesses run by women are successfully going further today. Also, just because jobs seem like they're tough, they could be really easy for women. Men take over but women can change that. In America, we don't have laws against women rights so it shouldn't be hard for women to start a change for themselves. We American citizens have to educate refugee women so that the ideas for women education and jobs can go forward.

Maya, this is so good! When you approached me about using the book you were reading, I was skeptical about the product you would be able to produce. I was wrong! I like how you were able to transfer the themes and knowledge you learned in the book to what we were covering in the classroom.

Women are outperforming men in the classroom at high school and college levels. We can hope that we will see true equality come to pass in our lifetime!
