Nathan Blanchard:

Discrimination is when someone uses a person's race, religion, sex, ect against them or uses it as some kind of advantage.

In my job some of the requirements are: physically able to move for extended periods of time as well as the ability to lift 50lbs above one's head.

Yes. Anyone can be discriminated against all it takes is for someone that is ignorant and small minded to make a comment or take away an opportunity because of who you are. Just would not let it get to me mentally, agree with the person to create an internal conflict within them and not worry about their destructive opinion. If it was within a workplace, I would go to an executive or someone with power over the person that made the comment.
